

Git · diff

What changed, drawn over the formatted document rather than as +/- lines.

Comparing

Comparing

Any branch, any commit

The same rendered diff, pointed at something other than the last commit.

One control, one filter

Branches and this document's commits, behind a single box.

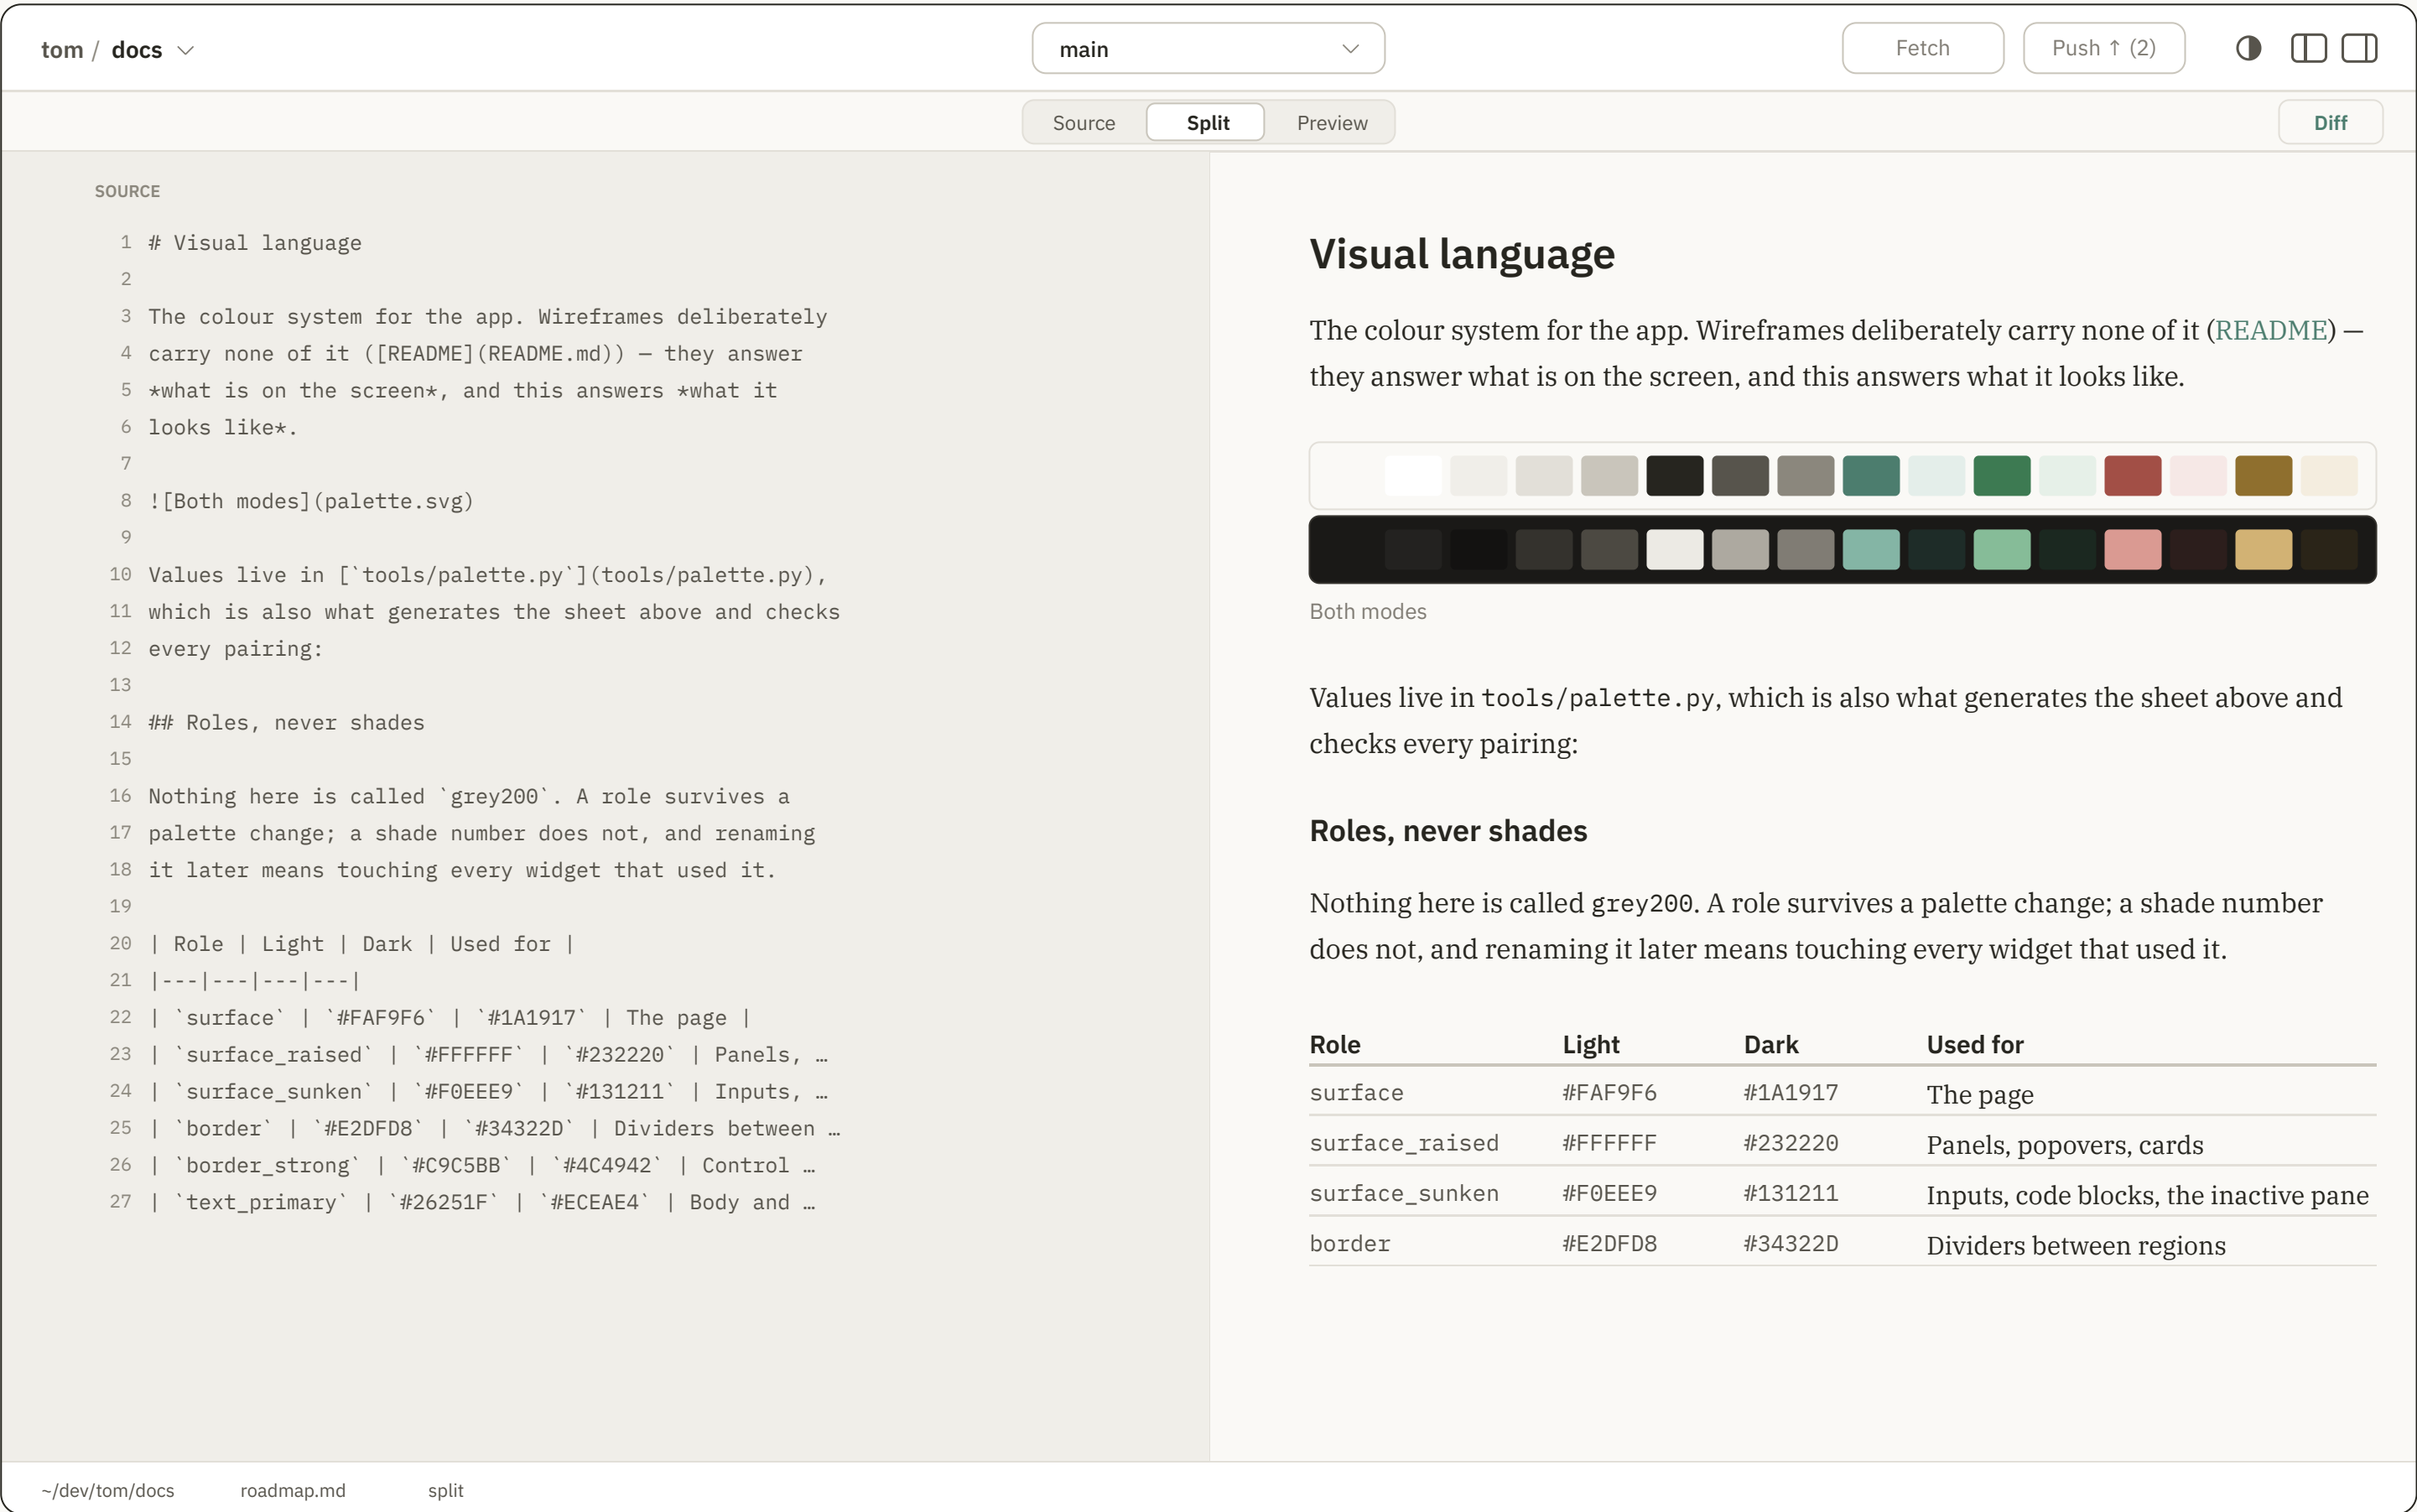

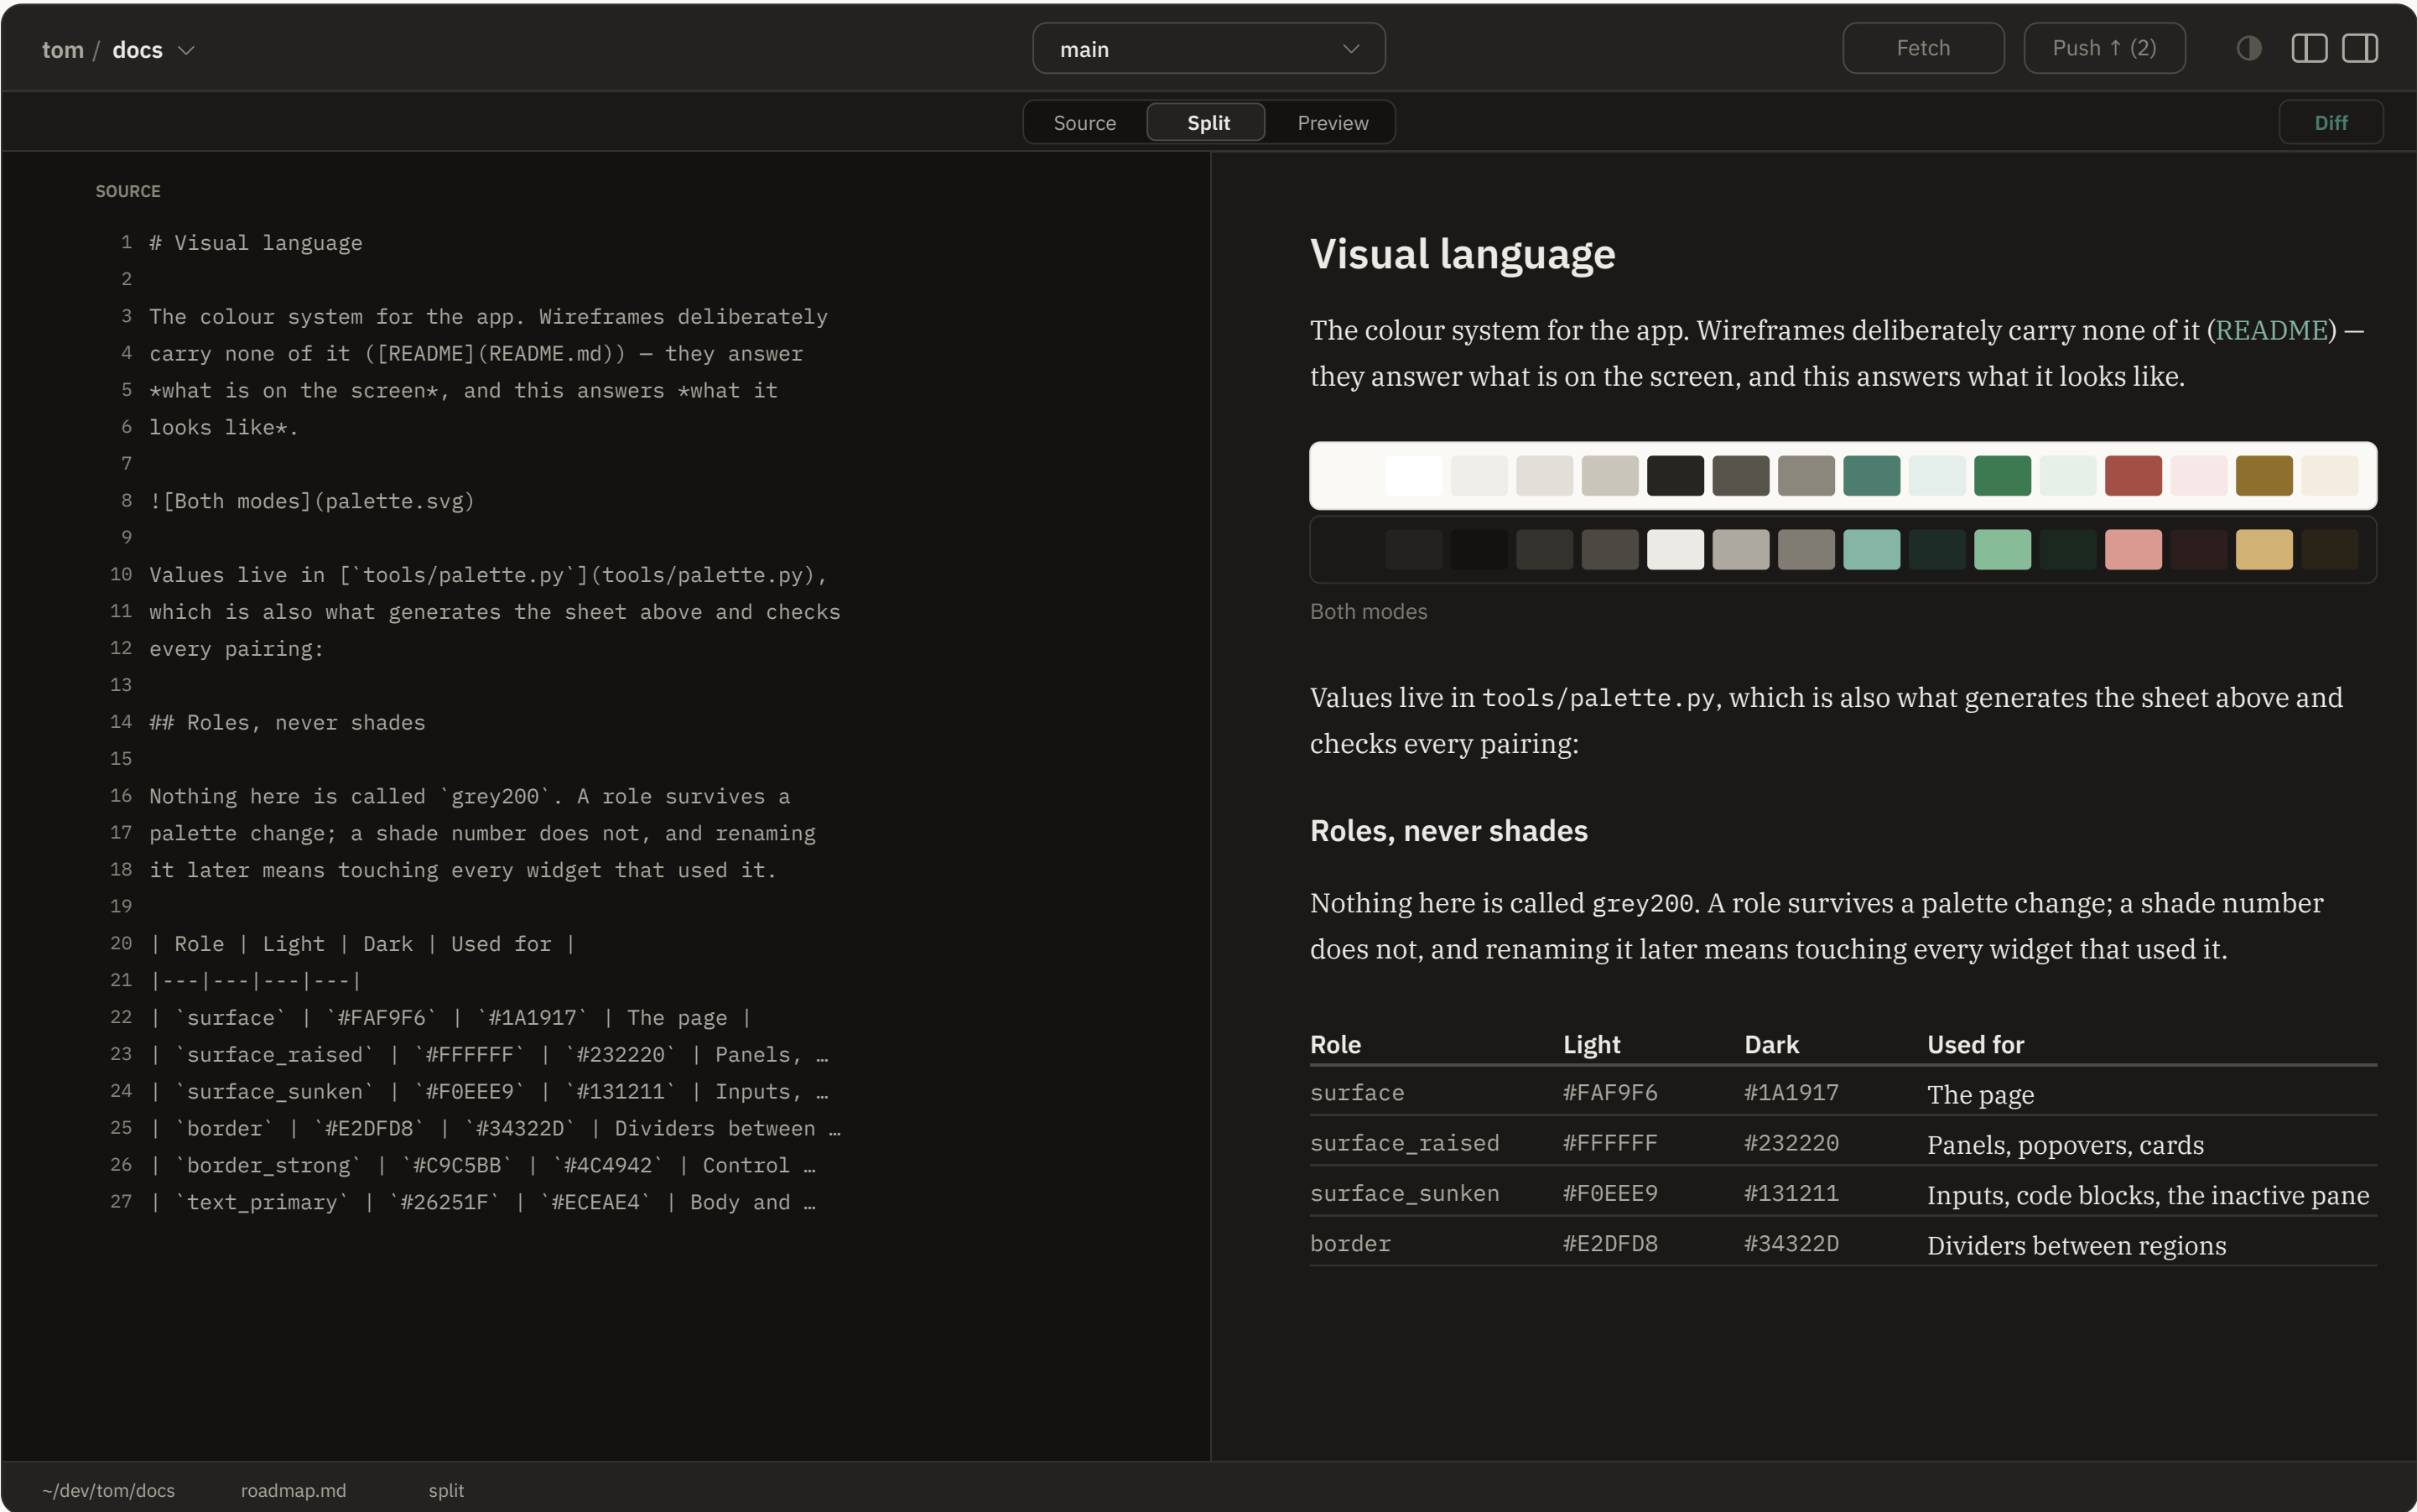

Comparing is reading

Nothing is checked out and no branch moves; only the base changes.

One way back

It returns to the working copy against the last commit.

Diff off

Diff off

The marks are a reading, not a mode

Turning the diff off leaves the document as it is on screen now, in whatever mode is chosen. Source, Split and Preview are untouched by it.

Off means nothing is compared

With the diff off there is no base, so the bar says nothing about one. A removed block is simply not in the document.

On is the default

A document that differs from HEAD arrives marked, because that is what the product is for. The control is how somebody reads it clean.
